

Miscellaneous Tips

Tips for trekking during the rainy season

Rainy season in Thailand runs between May to October. Trekking through the forests during this time doesn't drain much energy since the weather is not sweltering. But many people are unwilling to explore the jungle during the rainy time since the entire area is rather slippery and wet. In evergreen forest it is fraught with blood-sucking leeches eagerly waiting for their victims. But all of these natural difficulties make the journey a memorable experience. Certainly, obstacles scatter in every nook and cranny, but they will also bring with them a challenging experiences. For a part of your enjoyable episode, you should follow these recommendations.

1. To prevent water, always take a fly-sheet that can serve as a temporary roof. Also bring a light-weight raincoat that can serve as the fly-sheet in case of urgency. Cloths and other stuff should be put into plastic bags first before packing them into the knapsack. Shoes made from Gore-Tex material are suitable for trekking since they are 100% waterproof, hence making the shoes dry and ventilated well.

2. Comfortable and light-weight clothes made from synthetic fibre are recommended.

Cotton textile is unsuitable since it absorbs water and dries so slowly.

area might help.

All tourists should bear in mind that they all are responsible for keeping the natural world be just like before we step in.

3. Search for perfect and safe location to make camp. Do not make camp in a water-course or under the canopy of big tree since broken twigs and branches might fall down. Besides fly-sheet should be stretched-out. Drainage ditches should be dug around the camping area.

4. Be careful of poisonous creatures like scorpions, centipedes, and snakes. These animals always seek refuge in dry areas such as in the tents, sleeping bags and shoes. Please check thoroughly before using these stuff. Sprinkling insecticides or lime powder around the tent setting

Be Careful while in the jungle

Coming with the rainy season is the invisible dangers. We all must composed our mind all the time. Be careful while playing and swimming in the fall. Be accompanied while strolling around the area. Inform the official if wanting to go trekking since getting lost in the jungle, falling down, being attacked by wild animals, and hitting by swift rapids can occur all the time.